Jennifer Jordan is Associate Professor of Sociology and Urban Studies at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. She is the author of Structures of Memory: Understanding Urban Change in Berlin and Beyond (Stanford, 2006) and her current book on the sociology of the heirloom food movement will be published by the University of Chicago. Her research and teaching focus on collective memory and the sociology of culture, with a particular attention to place, materiality, and food. She has been a Fulbright scholar and a senior scientist at the Austrian Academy of Sciences, and has written articles on the politics of memory in post-1989 Germany as well as the sociological qualities of dumplings, tomatoes, and apples, and is developing research about cassava and the sociology of wild greens.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2013
1:00 - 3:00 PM

II. THEORIES AND CRITICISM OF CONTEMPORARY FOOD SYSTEMS